Certificate Program in Environmental and Occupational Health

Risk Management: Perception and Communication

Job Description

The University of Victoria's online Certificate Program in Environmental and Occupational Health (EOH) focuses on the latest dynamics of employee health and safety needs and the environmental impact of the workplace. Our graduates are trained specialists skilled in understanding and managing environmental and occupational health and safety issues.

Instructors within the EOH Certificate Program must be content experts within their field of study. They must prepare online discussion forums to ensure learner engagement and course objectives are achieved. Instructors facilitate online dialogue, address learners' individual and group-based questions, mark learning activities, and assignments throughout the 12-week online course.

Instructors are contracted through the University of Victoria and adhere to administrative responsibilities as outlined by administrative staff within the EOH Certificate Program.

Qualifications

Candidates must meet the following criteria:

- Relevant academic and professional accredited background
- Relevant work experience in the field of environmental and occupational health and safety
- Strong analytical and problem-solving skills
- Superior writing and communication skills
- Experience in adult education and online teaching is a strong asset

We are currently seeking a content expert to instruct the mandatory course, Risk Management: Perception and Communication, in the EOH program, requiring specific knowledge, skills and experience:

- Demonstrated proficiency in theoretical and applied approaches to risk management at the policy level and in the workplace
- Experience in utilizing risk mitigation and communication frameworks in both workplace and community settings
